GRADUATION REPORT

After two years and three months away from the School, having missed two graduations, it is in the nature of an event to be here again. From June, 1917, to March 2, 1919, I was in intimate association with those Massachusetts General Hospital graduates who went overseas with Base Hospital No. 6. We shared dormitories and barracks, and I have seen them settle down in wards, sixteen or more together, working like beavers to make home-like quarters with packing boxes and a little cretonne. I have seen them at their real work over there, — holding high the ideals of service such as the Massachusetts General Hospital has always stood for.

Arriving home in March I was given five months' leave of absence, ten weeks of which I spent visiting leading hospitals and schools in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, and New York State. Some of the hospitals and schools were in charge of our own graduates. Incidentally I saw, en route, as many of our Alumnae, who were in private life, as possible, which was a source of pleasure and enlightenment.

Our graduates have borne their share of the war burden with the rest of the world, feeling themselves, as trained nurses, a little more fortunate than other women.

Married nurses with families taught classes in surgical supplies and trained Nurses' Aids. Those without children volunteered for hospital work and filled the vacancies made by those who went overseas. Those in hospital positions often doubled their tasks and worked on the drive for student reserves and acted as instructors and organizers of Army Nursing Schools.

I hesitate to name any particular persons as having done exceptional work, but I cannot refrain from speaking of two of our early graduates. Miss M. E. P. Davis of the class of 1878, whom we all reverence and admire, after forty years of continuous professional work, embracing the organization and administration of hospitals and nursing schools, worked strenuously all through the war for the Red Cross and Nursing Organizations.

Mrs. Maria Llewellyn Card of the class of 1884 went to France when the war started and offered her services to the French Government in any capacity, with the result that she was given a château not far from Paris, where she financed and superintended a home for war orphans.

Of our nurses who went overseas one was an Edith Cavell Memorial Nurse; ten were Chief Nurses of Base Hospitals, and Miss Carrie M. Hall served as Chief of the Red Cross nurses in England and later in the same capacity in France. Seven of our number died in the service. They are as follows: Miss Frances E. Bartlett; Miss Mary F. Emery; Miss Lucy N. Fletcher; Mrs. H. A. Jaggard, neé Jessie W. Brown; Miss Constance Sinclair; Miss Nellie Ward; Miss Anna B. West.

Brave endurance of personal grief (for several lost their nearest and dearest relatives while they were overseas) and cheerful good fellowship with loyal adherence to established ideals characterized our nurses as a class.

Physical cowardice I believe to be the rarest thing in the world. Practically everybody wanted to go overseas, and overseas, practically everybody wanted to go to the front.

When shall we award medals for moral courage and devotion to duty back of the firing line?

It might seem after Armistice Day that the educating and graduating of nurses in peace times might be a tame occupation. Possibly it might be to a superintendent who had struggled to keep up standards and to meet war demands through 1917 and 1918; but to one who had the easier task of "carrying on" in France with a corps of thoroughly trained and zealous graduates, coming back to school work again, under present circumstances, is found to be a breathless experience.

Coming back with the inspiration of these contacts at home and abroad, and with eyes that have been focused for two years on quite other nursing aspects than those represented here, I have a keen appreciation of how impossible it will be to settle down to the same system of nursing education with which we were satisfied.

Much water has run under the bridge since June, 1917, and the adjustments made in our nursing schools to meet unusual conditions have left their impress. The great lesson is the war lesson. What has the war done for us? For one thing, it has made the world seem a small place. Nurses who previously would not consider a position farther away than would permit them to go home frequently, are now in Siberia or ready to go to other distant countries. We now have a new idea of the brotherhood of man.

War has disclosed the reality of the horror of unsanitary conditions; of herding people in steerages and barracks; the curse of hate; of idleness; of autocracy; of release from conventional restraints; and of the prevalence of venereal and other preventable diseases.

We have learned that the medical and nursing professions alone cannot cope unaided with vast epidemics.

Obviously health nurse teachers must be trained and distributed over all the world to teach home nursing and preventive medicine. Fifty thousand required if the health bills pass the legislature! A large contract! Yes, but a wonderful opportunity, such as would inspire the most sluggish imagination.

The stress for Public Health nurses is emphasizing that we must not waste time in preparing them, — the demand for them is already too urgent. Besides that, the laity and educators have given our nursing schools more thought during the last two years than has been given by them during all the life of our oldest schools.

A few years ago I think the greatest satisfaction that the average nurse got out of her work was the happiness derived from a sense of being necessary to the comfort of helpless, suffering people. The tokens of appreciation, such as a note of greeting left on the bedside table by a sleepy patient for her night nurse, or the ten-cent nosegay sent in by the cured errand boy, offset all the harrowing experiences and military discipline.

Now added to that satisfaction of the mother instinct is an increasing response to her intellectual curiosity about the whys and wherefores of all this sickness, accidents and poverty. Especially within the last two years nurses are thinking less of the immediate satisfaction in their work, and more of their future opportunities to prevent such conditions.

Each year there is an increasing number whose paramount interest is health work. Even those who choose the executive field are doing so because they want to make the hospitals they superintend real health centers, or their schools a source of good supply for health fields.

Now in the School we have nurses preparing for work in France, Serbia, China, Finland, Alaska, Labrador, Africa and India. We have promised to train two Bohemian women to take charge of a hospital to be established in Prague by the American Red Cross.

Fortunately there are others who are preparing for Public Health, executive, and educational work at home.

Two students have entered who are taking the five-year course which leads to a B.S. degree from Simmons College, the Massachusetts General Hospital diploma, and a certificate for Public Health from the Instructive District Nursing Association.

Before the war it was difficult to find students who were interested in rural nursing either at home or abroad, but there is now a distinct reaction.

What is the effect upon our schools of this reaction?

Definitely, a keen desire on the part of the students to learn as much as possible about the various branches of nursing and executive work in the shortest possible time, which necessitates on the part of our school the serious consideration of what may be considered an ideal curriculum; in fact, it thrusts upon our hospitals what seems like a new responsibility. Certainly a problem, because reconstruction is always more difficult than construction.

One thing we are sure of, and that is our nursing schools can no longer be treated as negligible factors to be taken as a matter of course.

There is even a question whether hospitals shall continue to encompass the nursing schools with all that is now demanded of them. It is, however, a problem that hospitals cannot solve alone, because all the functions of a modern hospital, diagnosis, care of the sick, research, and education, exist for the ultimate benefit of the public. The best assurance we have that the Public will give us the help we need to make our School responsive to present and future requirements is the service that is being rendered by those who have gone out from it.

Perhaps the best our graduates have given the public cannot be indicated by statistics — I am sure that is true of those who do private work, and there are at least one hundred and eighty-seven who are thus serving throughout the country. We doubt if there is any school that can make a better showing in the executive field than ours; forty-five nurses are superintendents of hospitals, many of them large institutions, and all important.

We believe that if we had definite financial support for the School we could do much better. How earnestly the graduates themselves believe in their school I think is evidenced by their voluntary contributions to an endowment fund started in 1915. It is not large, and one hesitates to speak of so small a sum when endowments of eleven million dollars are raised in a few weeks; but it is not without pride that I do state that ninety of our graduates, during war times, have suggested to the public by themselves giving six thousand dollars to start the endowment what we hope from it in the not distant future.

The nurses of this graduating class have lived through the vicissitudes of three serious epidemics and the disorganization of war conditions. The scarcity of graduates deprived them of some of the skilled supervision to which they were entitled, and thrust upon them prematurely responsibilities to which they rose with skill and patriotic fervor.

Seventy-five Nurses' Aids received training in our Hospital, and two of them in 1917 decided to enter the School for the complete course. They are in this graduating class. If the war had continued, no doubt all would now be in France.

Many others entered as a war measure, and that they stuck to the job here and are seeing it to a finish, instead of having left to go overseas as canteen workers, or after the Armistice — retired to private life, entitles them in my opinion to a great deal of credit.

To those probationers and Aids at home who nursed the "flu," risking and giving life freely, would I pay homage.

One privilege these nurses have had for which they will be increasingly thankful as time goes on has been the leadership of Helen Wood, a woman whose character, ability, ideals and qualities of leadership in her profession have brought the standards of the School to a higher plane, even during the stress of war. The service she has rendered, both in the School and in the State, deserves far greater recognition than my humble testimony. It has been written, however, in the hearts and lives of those who have worked with her during these critical years.

I believe both doctors and nurses in their hearts believe that much of what is good in our work and our ideals is due to the traditional influences of our Hospital, and that brings us to a realization of what we owe the Trustees who have fostered the institution, and to our Ladies' Committees that mother the work in it. We nurses must never forget that many of the opportunities and comforts enjoyed by us while we are connected with the Hospital, we owe largely to the interest and work of our Ladies' Advisory Committee.

Added to the substantial gifts previously donated to the New Home by graduating classes, we now enjoy some handsome lamps contributed by the class of 1919.

There have been many changes in our personnel of which I would like to speak if I had time. Some of our nurses have gone to larger fields, and while we miss them we can but rejoice in the recognition of their ability by others.

SARA E. PARSONS,
Superintendent of the Training School.

Massachusetts General Hospital,
January, 1920.

Report read at graduation of 1920 class.
